

Paul J. Fagan

In 1946, Paul J. Fagan opened the six-room Kauiki Inn, which would later evolve to the expanded 70-room Hana Ranch Hotel. Though not the first hotel in Hana, it became the town's most luxurious, with modern buildings, separate cottages, a dining room, gun room, cocktail lounge, and a multitude of activities.

"Hana offers the tourist and vacationist the finest facilities for pleasure and enjoyment", Fagan said in a 1945 Honolulu Star-Bulletin article. "The natural scenic beauty has all the loveliness for which Hawaii is noted."

But Fagan's land wasn't just a ranch and hotel. It was a whole living community, with churches, houses and a small population of people who called Hana home.

He also owned a baseball field near the hotel. Fagan was the owner of the now-defunct San Francisco Seals of the Pacific Coast League and used the baseball team to market the isolated resort by inviting the players for spring training over several years – along with sports writers to cover it.

In 1950, Fagan saw another of his dreams realized, when the original Hana Airport opened in a field off Hamoa Beach, making it even easier for visitors to arrive at Hana.

Ten years later, Fagan died at his home in Hillsborough. His wife had a memorial built for him in Hana – a large 30-foot-tall stone cross overlooking the hotel and his former lands. Known as Fagan's Cross, visitors to Hana often hike the 1 mile to the cross at a 500-foot elevation to see the sunrise.
