San Francisco's Japantown is only one of three remaining in the country. It all began in the 1860's when generations of Japanese immigrants settled here and began to share their art and culture with the city. Today, it's home to countless ramen and udon eateries, sushi restaurants and sweets shops where you can get imported, special treats that Japan is known for. Japantown also has shopping centers that feature everything from kimonos and manga to imported teas and folk art.
