✦ TRADITIONAL METHOD ✦

BASE WINE & ASSEMBLAGE

The first stage in the production of champagne is making a base wine, which is dry and has around 11.5% alcohol content.

There are three predominant Champagne grape varieties:

Chardonnay, Pinot Noir, Pinot Meunier

SECONDARY FERMANTATION

Tirage-liqueur is added to the base wine, then bottled and sealed with a crown cap.

Liqueur de tirage is a liquid of sugar, yeast, and some secrets of the Chef de cave, and it serves to kick-start the secondary fermentation.

REMUAGE

The bottles are turned neck-down and rotated by small increments clockwise and anti-clockwise meanwhile the sediment slide to the neck of the bottle. It can be done with manual remuage or automated riddling.

Sediment: a mixture of dead yeast cells and riddling aids

BOTTLE AGEING

Bottles are horizontally stacked in the cold dark cellars, a non-vintage requires 15 months from tirage to release, but a vintage must be aged at least three years.

DÉGORGEMENT

The upturned bottle is plunged into a refrigerating solution, making an icy plug of yeast - about an inch long - that shoots out like a champagne cork thanks to the pressure.

DOSAGE

The bottle is immediately topped up with a Liqueur d'expédition and corked, securely fastened with a muselet before too many bubbles escape.

Liqueur d'expédition: mix of the same base wine and sugar syrup
